Timeless

A black line on a white sheet of paper, a doodle, a drawing, a word. A sign with lots of meanings, at times different, only irreconcilable, cryptic or self-evident in its appearance, however, always a message. From the pictograph to the hieroglyphic, the ideogram, the phonosymbolic, no form of communication, not even artistic, can remain totally extraneous from any interpretative category. Its existence can be refused but not denied. From the probable reproduction of the reality as far as the representation of concepts that are increasingly more abstract, the artistic object has two identities: one intrinsic, closely linked to the creative act where the work is a sort of crystallization, and one extrinsic, created by all the possible interpretations of the work itself.

The background is a collage of aged, yellowed paper with various textures and creases. A photograph of a European city street scene is overlaid on the bottom left. The scene shows several multi-story buildings with Gothic architectural features, including pointed arch windows and intricate facades. In the foreground, there is a large, ornate statue of a dinosaur, possibly a T-Rex, standing on a pedestal. The overall color palette is warm and sepia-toned.

From the most simple to the most complex, from the personal history to that of entire cultures, from the concrete to the abstract passing through the cobweb of sensations and feelings. Pieces of jewellery are also signs, parts of an indecipherable alphabet at differing levels of awareness. A sort of writing which we do not possess the interpretative key for, whose symbols seem to be both archaic and familiar at the same time, metaphors of a language that does not have to be learnt as it is already written in our genetic and cultural code. Flowers speak of nature, hearts of love, rounded shapes envelope and reassure like a mother's womb and the bright, glaring light speaks of vitality and energy.
